

I do not feel that the "Do Not Call List" should be changed. The banks and lending institutions, have no right to ask for an exception that allows them to invade the privacy of telephone lines. It has finally gotten to a point where we can sit down to dinner without interruptions. It is extremely irritating that financial institutions want to use our telephone lines for their advertising. It will get to a point where individuals will use only their cell phones for phone communication, if the "Do Not Call List" is invaded.

Thank you,
Marilyn Zumkeller